NEW QUESTION: 1

Which two statements describe a routed switch port on a multilayer switch? (Choose two.)

A. Layer 2 switching and Layer 3 routing are mutually supported.

B. The routed switch port ensures that STP remains in the forwarding state.

C. The routed switch port is used when a switch has only one port per VLAN or subnet.

D. The port is not associated with any VLAN.

E. The routed switch port supports VLAN subinterfaces.

Answer: C,D

Explanation:

A routed port is a physical port that acts like a port on a router; it does not have to be connected to a router. A routed port is not associated with a particular VLAN, as is an access port. A routed port behaves like a regular router interface, except that it does not support VLAN subinterfaces. Routed ports can be configured with a Layer 3 routing protocol. A routed port is a Layer 3 interface only and does not support Layer 2 protocols, such as DTP and STP. You can configure routed ports by putting the interface into Layer 3 mode with the no switchport interface configuration command. Then you have to assign an IP address to the port, enable routing, and assign routing protocol characteristics by using the ip routing and router protocol global configuration commands.

Explanation

Box 1: Create a recovery database.

A recovery database (RDB) is a special kind of mailbox database that allows you to mount and extract data from a restored mailbox database as part of a recovery operation. RDBs allow you to recover data from a backup or copy of a database without disrupting user access to current data.

Box 2: Restore the mailbox database.

After you create an RDB, you can restore a mailbox database into the RDB by using a backup application or by copying a database and its log files into the RDB folder structure.

Box 3: New-MailboxRestoreRequest with -Recovery

Use the New-MailboxRestoreRequest cmdlet to restore a mailbox or items from the recovery database to a production mailbox.

Note: A recovery database (RDB) is a special kind of mailbox database that allows you to mount and extract data from a restored mailbox database as part of a recovery operation. RDBs allow you to recover data from a backup or copy of a database without disrupting user access to current data.

After you create an RDB, you can restore a mailbox database into the RDB by using a backup application or by copying a database and its log files into the RDB folder structure. Then you can use the New-MailboxRestoreRequest cmdlet to extract data from the recovered database. Once extracted, the data can then be exported to a folder or merged into an existing mailbox.
