B: Dropping a table invalidates dependent objects, such as indexes and constraints.

F: The DROP TABLE statement moves a table or object table to the recycle bin.

Incorrect:

Not B: In general sequences used in the table would not be affected when the table is dropped.

Not D: Unless you specify the PURGE clause, the DROP TABLE statement does not result in space being released back to the tablespace for use by other objects, and the space continues to count toward the user's space quota.

Not E: Dropping a table invalidates dependent objects and removes object privileges on the table. If you want to re-create the table, then you must regrant object privileges on the table, re-create the indexes, integrity constraints, and triggers for the table, and respecify its storage parameters.
