NEW QUESTION: 2

Which three configurations would increase data transfer rates in a volume SnapMirror environment for traditional volumes?

- A. The destination and source contain disks of the same size.
- B. The destination and source storage systems are no farther than 30 meters apart.
- C. The destination volumes are flexible volumes.
- D. The destination and the source contain RAID groups of the same size.
- E. The destination and source contain the same number of raid groups.

Answer: A,D,E

Explanation:

By aligning the performance of the source and destination, optimal data transfer (aka replication) rates can be attained. Flexvols don't matter, and there is no measurable difference between the performance of a network over a 30m or 3m cable.
