NEW QUESTION: 1

A company has severe problems with two SCA modules being deployed on a production environment. The cluster consists of multiple nodes and many other applications are deployed already. After a first investigation of the problem, the root cause seems to be related to inter-module SCA invocations. The problem must be solved as soon as possible with a minimal effect on other applications. Which approach should a deployment professional recommend to troubleshoot the problem on a production environment?

- A. Enable a cross-component trace for both SCA modules on all application servers. Capture a snapshot data to correlate the problem with the application workflow.
- B. Enable a SCA component-related trace on all application servers in the clustered environment. Analyze the traces for the problem by comparing the data for all servers.
- C. Enable a SCA component-related trace on all application servers and analyze the data using the Log Analyzer in the IBM Support Assistant (ISA).
- D. Enable a SCA component-related performance metric using the Tivoli Performance Viewer (TPV) in the administrative console. Monitor the number of failing SCA invocations for both modules.

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION: 2

The following table shows the SCA component-related performance metrics for the application servers in a clustered environment. The table lists the number of failing SCA invocations for both modules. The table also lists the number of successful SCA invocations for both modules. The table also lists the number of SCA invocations that are in progress for both modules.

Answer: A
Explanation:
Explanation
Use the Azure Key Vault, not the Windows Certificate Store, to store the master key.

Note: The Master Key Configuration page is where you set up your CMK (Column Master Key) and select the key store provider where the CMK will be stored. Currently, you can store a CMK in the Windows certificate store, Azure Key Vault, or a hardware security module (HSM).
